09:09:46 From Shirlee Baluyot (she/her) : Reacted to "not here yet" with 🙄

09:09:48 From Sean Hedden : Reacted to "We already are!" with ❤️

09:12:16 From John Wallschlaeger : Regarding the opening comments, It is no secret that insurance companies have a very strong influence on health care in America. I have worked with people in crisis for more than thirty years. Navigating our health care system while in crisis is very difficult and insurance company delays and insensitivity do not help anyone, neither the patient or the provider. Enough said

09:12:35 From Juliana Wichers : Reacted to "Regarding the openin..." with ❤️

09:12:57 From Kristen Ellis, LMFT - RI : a clean split on all options!

- 09:24:48 From Shirlee Baluyot (she/her) : Reacted to "Recovery can't be ta..." with 🧡
- 09:24:50 From Amanda Thompson : Our lived experience or trauma makes us resilient, not vulnerable.
- 09:24:52 From Justin Volpe : Are you saying people with lived experience are different from other staff experiencing the same issues in the same settings?
- 09:24:54 From Brandon Wilcox : I like to think of my vulnerability is a strength

- 09:25:02 From Ursula Whiteside : Reacted to "I like to think of m..." with ❤️
- 09:25:04 From Shirlee Baluyot (she/her) : Reacted to "Our lived experience..." with !
- 09:25:04 From Bev Marquez : Reacted to "I like to think of m..." with ❤️
- 09:25:08 From Sean Hedden : I'm a peer specialist. As someone who has worked on, supervised around, and trained for a peer-crisis line, I have experienced many calls that require alternatives to suicide, homicide, harm and substance use. These callers did not want to talk to a crisis specialist because, as many callers stated, the assessment process actually presents barriers of assumed power and privilege. Peers have the ability to be more culturally competent, practice all elements of trauma-informed care, and collaborate (rather than dictate) someone's pathway to safety.
- 09:25:15 From Shirlee Baluyot (she/her) : Reacted to "I like to think of m..." with 🧡
- 09:25:17 From Justin Volpe : Reacted to "I like to think of m..." with ❤️

- 09:25:35 From Bev Marquez : Reacted to "I'm a peer specialis..." with ❤️
- 09:25:36 From Courtney Haines : Reacted to "I'm a peer specialis..." with ❤️
- 09:25:40 From Monica Luke : Another debate around peer supporters is licensing and reimbursement requirements (particularly insurance/Medicaid requirements for documentation). Can our debaters comment on that?
- 09:25:43 From John Draper : Reacted to "I like to think of m..." with ❤️

- 09:27:00 From Mary Ann Arteaga : Replying to "I like to think of m..." Consumer connect more with P/S then with their Dr.
- 09:27:04 From Kayla Estes-Romero : Replying to "I'm a peer specialis..." "collaborate rather than dictate" - love that. That's why peers are great. We need more autonomy for callers/patients and fewer power imbalances in crisis care settings!

- 09:40:58 From Elizabeth Jackson : I find that the vulnerability issue absolutely crosses to professionals, Crisis work is stressful so in the same way a clinician with a chronic medical or mental health condition may not be able to maintain full time crisis work, someone in recovery may have a similar vulnerability. We have part time clinicians and peers due to needing to limit their stress as a self care reality. I will say individuals can be more open to accepting help from a peer so the are a huge help in many cases.

CMS (Medicaid, specifically) allows reimbursement for mobile crisis services in which a peer, regardless of whether certified/licensed or not, is part of the team providing service. BUT - for some services like SUD outpatient treatment, peers have to have state certification or licensure. And then there's commercial insurance which is basically 🤖

09:53:23 From sonja burns : @Wendy Morris - if you have not read the DOJ Report on the TX Juvenile Justice Department (TJJD) - please do The investigators did not know about the exclusionary criteria (despite being in TX over several years)- so did not understand the HUGE impact this has on the TJJD. The acuity of youth in the system is OFF the charts - and this issue of dual diagnosis is the elephant in the room - NO PLACE TO GO in crisis.
