UK wide response – Right Care, Right Person (RCRP) Approach

Objective:

- Ensure individuals in mental health crisis receive support from the most appropriate professionals, reducing unnecessary police involvement.

Previous Approach:

- Police often responded to mental health crises, even when no crime or immediate safety risk was present.
- Officers lacked specialized training, leading to delays in appropriate care.

Current Approach (RCRP):

- Police only intervene when there is an immediate risk to life, serious harm, or a crime.
- Mental health professionals and crisis teams take the lead in non-criminal incidents.
- Improved handover processes ensure timely access to care.
- THRIVE (Threat, Harm, Risk, Investigation, Vulnerability and Engagement)

Impact:

- Reduces distress for individuals in crisis.
- Allows police to focus on core duties.
- Strengthens mental health service pathways.

Stakeholder Roles & Crisis Intervention Resourcing

Key Partners:

- NHS England & Local Health Bodies: Expand crisis response teams, ensuring 24/7 availability.
- Local Authorities & Social Care: Provide community-based support and safeguarding measures.

European Union

The European Commission's 2025 Mental Health Framework

- 20 Flagship initiatives – These span a wide range of actions: from mental health promotion in schools and suicide prevention, to supporting people in vulnerable situations (e.g. migrants, older adults, people affected by crises). Flagships are designed to complement national efforts and stimulate innovation.
- Substantial investment – More than €1.2 billion is being mobilised via EU4Health, Horizon Europe, and Erasmus+, with targeted calls for research, digital tools, workforce development, and cross-border collaboration.
- Youth mental health in focus – Schools and educational systems are key allies. The Commission supports member states through teacher training, peer-support models, and tools to detect and respond to mental distress early.
- Workplace well-being – A new focus on mental health at work promotes proactive measures against stress and burnout, with support for Member States to embed psychosocial risk management in labour and social policies.
- Evidence-based policy – To ensure effective interventions, the Commission is strengthening data collection, indicators, and monitoring frameworks, allowing for better comparability and accountability across the EU.
- Community-based services – In line with global health recommendations, the Commission encourages a shift away from institutional care towards integrated, person-centred services that are accessible at the community level.

The strategic approach offers opportunities for governments, civil society, researchers, health professionals, and employers to align efforts and deliver meaningful improvements in mental health outcomes across Europe.

Health in all policies approach to reduce crisis - European Union

The WHO Europe – published the Paris Statement which lays out the key priorities and shared policy directions that have been agreed upon, including the following:

- Align accountability and funding across sectors and government levels.
- Actively involve mental health service users from the outset in policy design, implementation and evaluation.
- Promote social and intergenerational connections through public spaces and services that reduce discrimination against people with mental health conditions.
- Engage schools, prisons, workplaces, media, youth, urban planning and health/social care settings to develop and implement prevention initiatives.
- Promote safe use of online mental-health resources as well as digital literacy to help keep people, especially youth, safe online.

“Mental health shapes every heartbeat of our daily lives – in the classroom and the workplace, at the kitchen table and in the corridors of power,”

Dr Hans Henri P. Kluge, WHO Regional Director for Europe.

The EU's 2025 Mental Health Framework places prevention and early action at its core by:

- Funding school and workplace well-being programmes that build resilience long before crises emerge.
- Driving community-based, person-centred services that minimise the need for inpatient admission.
- Piloting mobile crisis teams within emergency call centres to offer immediate professional support.
- Using cross-border data to identify gaps and scale successful preventive initiatives.
- While not prescribing police reforms, the emphasis on prevention and community delivery embodies care closer to home.

Australian Responses

Federal and state governments deploy co-response models alongside law enforcement:

- Queensland Police Service's 2023–27 strategy emphasizes diversion and least-restrictive interventions, backed by MoUs with health services.
- NSW's 2024 Mental Health Strategic Action Plan mandates de-escalation and Mental Health Act training, with embedded Mental Health Intervention Coordinators for real-time advice.
- Crisis Assessment and Treatment Teams (CATT), Mental Health Acute Assessment Teams (MHAAT), and Police-Mental Health Intervention Teams (PACER) offer on-scene nursing assessments, non-police transport, and peer-support workers.
- Early academic evaluations report reductions in hospital detentions and police resource use, though more rigorous trials are needed to establish best practice.

Suicide Prevention

- Under the Fifth National Mental Health and Suicide Prevention Plan, Australia prioritises integrated early intervention, crisis line services (e.g., Lifeline), Headspace support for young people, and continuous evaluation of outcomes across policing, health, and community sectors.

New Zealand

Crisis Intervention

A phased rollout (Nov 2024 – Sept 2025) shifts crisis leadership to health services:

- Phase 1 – Higher thresholds for police intervention; voluntary ED handovers.
- Phases 2–4 – Capped handover times (60 minutes then 15 minutes), tightened custody-suite rules, and revised missing-person protocols.
- The multi-agency 111 response within five years aligns with the Kia Manawanui mental well-being plan and reinforces that mental distress is not a criminal matter.

Suicide Prevention

- Every Life Matters (2019–2029) and its Action Plans (2019–2024, 2025–2029) set a vision of zero suicides through promotion, prevention, intervention, and postvention.
- National leadership by the Suicide Prevention Office drives evidence-based workforce development, evaluation, and collective ownership.

International best practice highlighted in the New Zealand Review

- 24/7 coverage through mobile crisis teams, crisis stabilisation units (e.g. EmPATH in the US), and crisis cafés.
- System-wide governance and standards, as seen in the UK's Crisis Resolution Home Treatment teams and Ireland's Sharing the Vision.
- Non-coercive, trauma-responsive care, moving away from police-led responses and embedding peer and lived experience roles.
- Equity and rights frameworks, drawing on instruments such as the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples (UNDRIP) and the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities (CRPD) to ensure cultural safety and self-determination for Indigenous people and other specific groups of people.
- Youth-specific supports, including purpose-built hubs (e.g. Best for You in the UK) and digital services such as Canada's Kids Help Phone.
- Peer-led crisis houses and cafés offering low-barrier, relational care
- Purpose-built therapeutic environments, distinct from emergency departments that reduce trauma and support voluntary engagement.
- Digital helplines and telepsychiatry, integrated with coordinated follow-up care

Conclusion

- Our international review of suicide prevention and mental health crisis response has revealed a growing global commitment to evidence-based, culturally responsive, and community-driven approaches. From innovative digital interventions to integrated care models and peer-led support systems, the best practices identified underscore the importance of collaboration across sectors and borders.
- As we move forward, it is imperative to translate these insights into scalable, sustainable action—grounded in compassion, equity, and lived experience. By aligning global knowledge with local needs, we can strengthen resilience, reduce stigma, and ensure that every individual in crisis has access to timely, effective support.

"Systems leadership facilitates the adoption of more integrated care through creating a shared vision with professionals, managers, and those with lived experience... keeping the interests of the communities it serves at the heart of decisions."
